Already a modern Australian classic, When The Rain Stops Falling is a colossal work that spans generations and continents, reaching out into the future and beyond the realm of realism. It's rare to see such an ambitious work get off the ground in Australia, where audiences and budgets are often limited, yet this play continues to be produced nationally and the world.

For knee-slappers you have funny-sexy, funny-psychological, funny-psychic, funny-Chekhovian boredom and funny-erudite. There is even a play within a play. All this and more is crowned at the end in a brilliant ranting monologue by Vanya, delivered with comedic punch and passion by Jacobs, on the demise of wholesome values in the early 21st century.
